3.1 The Development of the Determination of Mass

Hans R. Jenemann

Contents

3.1.1 Scales in Antiquity	120
3.1.1.1 The Age of Scales	120
3.1.1.2 The Early Symmetrical Form of Scales	120
3.1.1.3 High Accuracy Scales in the Egyptian New Kingdom	121
3.1.1.4 Units of Weight in Ancient Cultures	125
3.1.1.5 Development of the Weight from the Grain of Corn	126
3.1.1.6 Development of Coin Minting from the Weighing of Goods	126
3.1.1.7 Development of the Fundamental Laws of Weighing by the Greeks	127
3.1.1.8 Roman Scales	128
3.1.1.9 The Roman System of Weights	130
3.1.2 Scales and Weighing in the Middle Ages	130
3.1.2.1 Scales in Countries after the Roman Empire	130
3.1.2.2 Scales in Cultural History	131
3.1.2.3 Beginnings of Fragmentation of the System of Currency and Weights	133
3.1.2.4 Gold Scales and Apothecaries' Scales	134
3.1.2.5 The Assay Balance as an Early Form of Analytical Balance	135
3.1.2.6 Scales and Weighing in the Transition to the Modern Age	136
3.1.3 Balances and Weighing in the Age of Enlightenment (17th and 18th Centuries)	138
3.1.3.1 Isaac Newton's Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy	138
3.1.3.2 Jacob Leupold's "Theatrum Staticum Universale"	138
3.1.3.3 Leonhard Euler's New Theory of the Balance	139
3.1.3.4 New Systems of Scales	140
3.1.3.4.1 The Spring Balance	140
3.1.3.4.2 The Deflection Balance	141
3.1.3.5 The Beam Balance combined with other Weighing Systems	142
3.1.3.6 From the Assay Balance to the High Accuracy Balance	142
3.1.3.7 Refined Weighing Methods	144
3.1.3.7.1 Transposition Weighing	146
3.1.3.7.2 Substitution Weighing	146
3.1.3.8 Weighings Taking Air Buoyancy into Account	147
3.1.4 Scales and Weighing in the 19th and 20th Century	148
3.1.4.1 Metrological Weighing in the Early 19 th Century	148
3.1.4.2 High-Accuracy Weighing Using Gaussian Error Statistics	149
3.1.4.3 The New Construction of the Balance According to Paul Bunge	150
3.1.4.4 The Ruesprecht Balance According to F. Arzberger for Accurate Mass Determination	151
3.1.4.5 From the High-Accuracy Balance of the 19 th Century to the Analytical Balance of the 1930's	152
